Yet I believe having your own space—where you can think, dream, ponder, plan and create, or just be—is essential in our fast-paced, over-connected world. And your office or home office doesn't count, since it's a place where your mind immediately goes outward to what task is on deck, rather than looking inward for that much-important inner peace.

The Power Of Owning Your Space One of the most powerful lessons for all leaders is to embrace the importance of owning your space. When you own your space, you say to the world that you belong, you believe in your value and you give yourself every opportunity to shine, allowing others to form a positive impression of you.

The Power Of Owning Your Space - Jane Benston

We have to have a space to call our own! I couldn't get anything done quick enough when I had to put my things away. It was frustrating! Mr Geek put a baby gate around my sewing space and it made a HUGE difference. BTW, one of my faves: "To the Lighthouse." You have to be up with the lark . . . only if I can smell the coffee brewing. A space of my own! Children often love to crawl into small spaces, hide away from everyone, gather their treasures or pretend to be somewhere else. In this space they can have some quiet time, to relax or play and be on their own. All they might need is to be on a sofa with a fleecy blanket, on their bed, in a cosy corner or in a 'den'.
