Fog charts list landmarks and distances along a line so that a crew can refer to it when running in foggy conditions. For example, when passing signal 2372 in the fog, the chart will list the distance to the next signal, as well as any road crossings or other visible landmarks. It comes in handy when fog reduces visibility to a matter of feet.

Groups. Groups in FOG are used to organize your hosts into real world logical clusters. This is intended to ease management of the computers. A single host can be a member of infinitely many groups, so if a computer happens to be a member of the group called "Third Floor", it could also be a member of "Math Department", or "Dell PCs."

Advection Fog: "When a layer of warm, moist air moves over a cold surface, advection fog is likely to occur. Unlike radiation fog, wind is required to form advection fog. Winds of up to 15 knots allow the fog to form and intensify. Advection fog is common in coastal areas where sea breezes can blow the air over cooler landmasses."

First, fog lights can reach under fog to light up the ground without interference. Many fogs don't quite reach the ground, because they are supported by a small cushion of air. This cushion lifts the fog off the ground just a little bit. It's often just enough for fog lights to spread a wide, low beam underneath.
