Well you are right snails are not fish, but the same general rules apply. I have 1 mystery snail myself and I love him, their mouths are silly. Anywho, there isn't really a "too many" it all just depends on what your tank can hold. Since they are algae eaters you will have to supplement them with algae wafers if you have a lot of them.

How many snails is too many? - Aquarium Forum

I was planning to order up some Nass. Vibex snails off ebay to keep the sandbed clean. Since the bulk of the cost is shipping, only a couple bucks more will double your snail count (20 -> 50 -> 100, etc), but I don't want to end up with "too Many" (if there is really such a thing - within reason of course). What camp do people tend to align with?
