Background: Islam acknowledges that infertility is a significant hardship. Attempts to cure infertility are not only permissible, but also encouraged in Islam. Over the last three decades, a multitude of advances in assisted reproductive technologies (ARTs) have appeared. This review was carried out to inform readers, who are not familiar with Islamic doctrine, about the Sunni perspective on this topic.

In Islamic law, all assisted reproductive technologies (ARTs) are allowed, provided that the source of the sperm, ovum, and uterus comes from a legally married couple during the span of their marriage. No third party should intrude upon the marital functions of sex and procreation. Surrogacy is not accepted in Islam.

Assisted Reproductive Technology: Islamic Perspective ...

We outline the global problem of infertility and the possibilities afforded by assisted reproductive technologies (ARTs) to remedy them, before looking specifically at the ways in which Islam has responded to the novel ethical and social dilemmas generated by these technologies.
