Thoughts and Questions. – Donnelly talks about the universality of HR as though this signifies adherence to HR policy. Adherence does not exist, however, so long as violations continue to occur. – Donnelly states that "the right holder is responsible for policing the maintenance of his/her own rights" (8), but what if the right holder is unable to do so?

Jack Donnelly on Universal Human Rights | The World As A ...

Human rights are equal rights; all people have the same human rights as everyone else. They are inalienable; one cannot stop being human no matter how badly one behaves or how monstrously one is treated. And they are universal in that we consider all members of the species Homo Sapiens as human beings and thus, automatically, holders of human rights. Human rights can be violated, ignored or abrogated and often are with impunity for the violators.
