I believe it is compassionate leadership. It starts with the simple act of caring and leading from the heart. Taking the time to have meaningful discussions with employees and teams about how they are doing provides tremendous support for them at a time when they need it but also valuable insights for leadership.

Leadership Insights from Julie Smith | ULI Washington

Leadership insights are an ever more important part of developing as a leader. Leadership is increasingly needed in unpredictable circumstances. It's leaders who are expected to show the way forward, often by thinking differently. That means you need to stretch your thinking and enhance your practice by applying fresh leadership insights to the workplace. Theories and models are helpful but they can also be limiting.
