Malcolm X Speaks Selected Speeches

Malcolm X Speaks: Selected Speeches and Statements - these speeches were mentioned in Between the World and Me by Ta Nehisi Coates, which I read last year. I read this book in college, but wanted to revisit it now that I have re-read The Autobiography of Malcolm X, and was reading Taylor Branche's works that I found very problematic in their handling of Black nationalism and Malcolm X specifically.

While serving a prison term for burglary in 1952, he converted to Islam and undertook an intensive program of study and self-improvement, movingly detailed in "Autobiography of Malcolm X." He wrote constantly to Elijah Muhammad (Elijah Poole, 1897--1975), head of the black separatist Nation of Islam, which already claimed the loyalty of several of his brothers and sisters.

Malcolm X Speaks: Selected Speeches and Statements ...

Malcolm X had a lot of compelling subjects in his speeches, but the topic that I was the most interested in was the one he spoke about the least: education. It's undeniable that the educational system of America is flawed. What's so interesting is the link he draws between education and oppression.
