I visited a camera shop to look at an used 24 mm Minolta AF. I have seen it advertised in a magazine. Unfortunately it was sold. I saw that they had a Minolta 9xi on the shelf. I've been thinking about switching camera to a model with better build quality so I asked if I could try it. I owned a Minolta Dynax 600si at the time (and still own it).

The Minolta 9xi (All pics: Robert Smith) By Robert Smith. Welcome to the Minolta 9xi. In 1992 it was too expensive for me, so my Minolta SRT101 would just have to suffice. I still own and use an SRT, it is one hell of a camera and those Rokkor lenses do things for my soul that more modern, sterile glass cannot replicate, but I stumbled across a ...

Minolta Maxxum 9xi - a streamlined interface - unusual in the world of SLRs. Back then. I introduced the Minolta Maxxum 9xi in a blog post a few weeks ago. The 9xi was a camera built to near pro quality standards, with a high end specs sheet (the fastest shutter on a 35mm camera, weather sealing, electric command of the depth of field preview), but its user interface and its internals were ...

The Minolta Dynax 9Ti. A camera with a titanium body and some extra custom functions. Essentially it's the same as the regular '9'. Due to it's rareness (only 1.000 were made), it costs a lot more than a used regular. For about € 300,- to € 400,- you can buy yourself a secondhand Dynax 9 (€ 1.000 to € 1.500 for a used 9Ti).

The Minolta 9xi was, when new in 1992, an advanced 35 mm single-lens reflex camera design. It incorporated the world's fastest autofocus system (according to the company and when coupled to a xi series lens), had a maximum shutter speed of 1/12000 of a second and a 14-zone metering system.. The 9xi had been improved in many areas over the previous flagships, the 9000 and 8000i, including:

Minolta Dynax 7 Film SLR Review | ePHOTOzine

With this camera, Minolta introduced a new user interface system that was a throwback to the cameras of yesteryear. The current philosophy of that time was to manipulate the camera controls via menus and button or dial combinations. Minolta's own rugged 9xi was an example of this. As good as that system was, there was an increasing demand for a ...
