I am seriously considering a 2009 Murano SL. I do not know very much about the CVT transmission and I noticed that there is only one 'drive' choice, that being 'D'. While I understand this is an AWD vehicle (my first) I am concerned that I will not have the ability to manually shift into a lower...

So I am the proud new owner of a 2010 Murano LE with all the toys available at that time. It has 110K on the clock. So as part of the maintenance I do on any used car I acquire, I go to Nissan to have the trans fluid changed. Long story short, I get turned away based on the mileage and no history of prior CVT fluid changes.

2010 Murano CVT fluid change question | The Nissan Club

i drain and fill my murano's cvt oil each 15000 miles because when i unscrew the cvt bolt only 5 L go down, i know the cvt has about 8L inside but i can't take them out since i do it on my own with the car turned off. so i drain 5l from the bottom and refill with same quantity of new cvt ns2 nissan oil.
