As the new owner of six love birds, I find THE LOVE BIRD HANDBOOK by Vera Appleyard, indispensable. I now know that my little birds are a great choice of parrot(two toes back and two toes front and a 'horned beak'). I like the colorful antics of the larger birds, but am afraid of the bigger parrots with their tough beaks.

Fischer's Lovebirds (Agapornis fischeri), fall into a group known as the eye-ring lovebirds, attributed to the white ring around their eyes. They are smaller than the peach face and masked lovebirds, and have a distinct, high-pitched chirp. Provided with adequate space, a stimulating environment, and appropriate nutrition, a Fischer's Lovebird can become a cherished companion parrot.

Sometimes even with the greatest of care, a baby can develop splay legs. Preventive measures are best (such as making sure that there is enough nesting material in the box and that the diet is nutritionally complete for the parents), but every once and a while, the mother hen will sit too tight on a baby and cause one or both legs to appear to stick out from the body.
