Soundscape - Wikipedia

The soundscape—a term coined by the author—is our sonic environment, the ever-present array of noises with which we all live. Beginning with the primordial sounds of nature, we have experienced an ever-increasing complexity of our sonic surroundings. As civilization develops, new noises rise up around us: from the creaking wheel, the clang of the blacksmith's hammer, and the distant chugging of steam trains to the "sound imperialism" of airports, city streets, and factories.

This is a visual representation of the soundscape of my neighborhood during the pandemic. The undulating orange bands about two-thirds up the frame are the unusual bird calls and their occasional echoes. The top band is constant crickets. The bright orange vertical column in the center is a car passing by. The brighter the color, the higher the amplitude, the louder you will perceive the sound to be.
